The beauty possible in people, in art and architecture, in archaeology and structure, have always been a part of my life. Without these, life would be the vacuum which so often threatens to engulf us. One cannot acquire a love of these... they are inherent and must be cherished from the beginning.

TAMARIND LITHOGRAPHY WORKSHOP, INC.
1112 N. Tamarind Avenue, Los Angeles, California 90038

Artist: Ruth Asawa
1116 Castro Street
San Francisco, Calif. 94114

Tamarind Fellowship: September - October 1965

Sculptress Ruth Asawa, working in lithography for the first time, explored many techniques in the fifty-four prints of her Tamarind oeuvre. She experimented with washes, shellac and rosin reverses, acid-tint and various transfer papers in lithographs that deal mostly with subjects from nature. The artist exploits the organic qualities of the medium to render the substance of objects - the texture and luminosity of their surfaces. In "Poppy" (30" x 20½"), a large orange flower floats in a sea of blue wash; and in "Owl" (24" x 35"), the black bird emerges from a cloudy sky of black washes.

Asawa worked closely with artisan-printer Clifford Smith and the printer-fellows of Tamarind. Generally she drew her images on stone, and they were hand-pulled in both black and color. The artist experimented with many papers, including brown Japanese Catermole. The impressions range in size from 11" x 11" to 41" x 29" and are priced from $75.

A suite of twelve lithographs is titled "Flowers" and includes hand-drawn title and colophon pages. There are ten images of flowers; three are in black and white and seven are in color. The artist's edition of twenty was pulled on Arches paper; the nine Tamarind Impressions were printed on German Etching paper. The suite is enclosed in a box made by the Schuberth Bookbindery, San Francisco, and will sell for $450.

Ruth Asawa was born in 1926 in Norwalk, California. She has had one-man shows at the Peridot Gallery, New York, the M. H. De Young Memorial Museum, San Francisco, and the San Francisco Museum of Art. She has participated in a two-man show at the Ankrum Gallery, Los Angeles. Among her group shows are the Sao Paulo Biennale and exhibitions at the San Francisco Museum of Art, the Whitney Museum of American Art, the Chicago Art Institute, the Santa Barbara Museum of Art, the Oakland Museum of Art, the Denver Museum of Art, The Museum of Modern Art and the M. H. De Young Memorial Museum. She is represented in the collections of The Museum of Modern Art, the Oakland Museum of Art, the Whitney Museum of American Art and Williams College, as well as numerous private collections.

RUTH ASAWA ARTIST'S FILE
 Sculptures, Drawings and Lithographs
 May 15th - June 28th, 2003

A Zen Buddhist background supported RUTH ASAWA at an early age in her determination to become an artist. From misfortune to good fortune, in 1942 in the temporary Japanese internment distribution center at Santa Anita racetrack, she received art training from fellow internees - Walt Disney studio artists who spent five hours a day teaching drawing. She continued her art training at the Rohwer Relocation Center in Arkansas, finally earning a scholarship to Black Mountain College in North Carolina to study with avant-garde artists Josef Albers and Buckminster Fuller. Inspired by their philosophies and life-long friendship, she found a unique aesthetic 'voice' in her experiments with wire crocheted forms using natural tools: her fingers.

At Black Mountain, Asawa met and married fellow student/architect Albert Lanier. They moved to San Francisco where she continued to crochet her wire sculptures. Those airy and sensuously curved globes, baskets and lacy forms hung from the walls and ceiling, capturing space and light and a vista that encompassed the environment. In addition to cast bronze pedestal sculptures, she also explored lithography through a fellowship to the Tamarind Lithography Workshop in Los Angeles in the 1960s. The viewer can see that, calligraphically, her wire forms are often transposed to the lithograph stone!

In addition to her wire and bronze sculptures and lithographs, our show includes 'sumi' brush drawings from the 1950s. These "Plane Trees" were made by manipulating poured sumi ink on a wax-coated paper; rich, full forms resulted. Asawa has an affinity for ink and, throughout the recent years (even today!), she has created intricate renderings of people, plants and flowers that will be presented on our walls. The relationship between these fine line drawings and the delicate wire sculptures is interesting to note.

Over the years, as a mother of six, an inspiring teacher, a renowned artist and a community arts advocate, Asawa created cast bronze pedestal pieces and numerous public sculptures throughout the San Francisco area...and received accolades and many awards. Her work has been purchased by prestigious institutions that include the Whitney Museum, the MOMA, the SFMMA and the Oakland Art Museum.

Slides and digital images are available upon request.

Kyoko Asano: The Table Series: New Paintings
October 10 - November 14, 1992

OPENING RECEPTION: SATURDAY, OCTOBER 10, 3-5 PM

Gallery Hours: Tuesday - Saturday, 11:00 - 5:00
Contact: Steven Frisina or Jean Milant 213-680-3473

Cirrus Gallery is pleased to announce the opening of an exhibition of new paintings by Kyoko Asano, on view October 10 to November 14 in the second floor gallery.

Asano's recent series of paintings are still lifes all of which contain a tabletop or part of a table with an object or objects arranged on top of it. An elaborate and very detailed tablecloth covers the tables and contrasts against the flat color the surrounding space is painted. These two areas are anchored together by the objects placed on the table (a rock, vase, bowl, etc.) This series of paintings is meditative and continues Asano's exploration into issues like collective consciousness, relativity of time, and the time-space-event continuum.

Asano was born in Japan and currently lives and works in California. Her work is represented in numerous public and private collections. In addition to Cirrus, Asano's work has been featured in exhibitions at L.A.I.C.A., the Laguna Beach Museum of Art, the Long Beach Museum of Art, and the Municipal Art Gallery, Los Angeles.

ONE-MAN

Upon graduation from high school, I was permitted to leave the internment camp in Arkansas to attend college. I pursued a teaching credential in art at Milwaukee State Teachers College, studying drawing, painting, print-making, pottery and weaving. After three years I was told that no one would hire me because we were still at war with Japan.

Fellow students who had gone to Black Mountain College, North Carolina, the year before persuaded me to go with them to their new school. Teachers there were practicing artists, and there was no separation between studying, performing the daily chores and relating to many art forms. I spent three years there and encountered great teachers who gave me enough stimulation to last me for the rest of my life — Josef Albers, painter, Buckminster Fuller, inventor, Max Dehn, the mathematician, and many others. Through them I came to understand the total commitment required if one must be an artist.

Since Black Mountain, San Francisco has been my home. I have reared my own family here and have tried to integrate that undertaking with "being an artist". Most of this show is a diary of these years. Fortunately there have been commissions which permitted me to realize bigger projects than would have been possible in my kitchen or basement workshop.

Through this show I hope to share with you the joy and wonder I find in working. Perhaps some of you will make art an integral part of your daily lives. It is a very satisfying preoccupation.

RUTH ASAWA

ONE-MAN

"Ruth Asawa's webs of wonder, called "sculpture" for want of a better word, lace the upper reaches of a de Young Gallery.

The delicate forms of this Japanese-American are known from sea to shining sea. Completely unique, they suggest only themselves or, with their sense of growth, air plants. Some drop on a fine strand, develop a bulb, drop again and redevelop. Others leaf out. Gently turning, catching and reflecting the light, these airy shapes seem less real than the shadows they cast.

Her sculpture has been included in numerous important exhibits and presented in one man shows at New York's Stable and Peridot galleries." Miriam Dungam Cross

"—Manhattan gallerygoers crowded two shows that uniquely bridged East and West. Both were important sculpture exhibitions, and both were by Japanese-Americans: Isamu Noguchi and Ruth Asawa. Ruth Asawa studied under Joseph Albers at Black Mountain College. If Noguchi's ceramics demonstrate a certain grinning bounciness in the Japanese heritage, Asawa's wire constructions show the opposite side: austerity and calm. In their openness, delicacy and symmetry they somewhat resemble blossoms, odorless, colorless outsize, yet refreshing to contemplate.

Noguchi and Asawa share one quality of Oriental art that Western artists often lack: economy of means. Their Japanese ancestors devoted vast efforts to making a single brush stroke look easy. By confining themselves to simple shapes made of patted mud and woven wire respectively, Noguchi and Asawa also achieved a pleasing quality of ease and oneness with their work. Judged by one standard of art, i.e., the proportion of visible effort to effect their sculptures stand high."

TIME Magazine

"Miss Asawa's exhibition (de Young Museum) consists largely of hanging sculptures. The transparent forms—flowing freely and hanging freely from the ceiling—are extraordinarily rich in design and equally rich in emotional connotation. Often these shapes incorporate other shapes, sometimes in very complicated ways; there may be as many as five tissues of knitted wire, each differing in shape and color, one enclosing another, in a single work. Sometimes Miss Asawa turns in the opposite direction; instead of enclosure, openness becomes her theme, and then the sculpture is like a glistening, monumental abstraction of foliage and flowers.

All in all, Miss Asawa possesses one of the most original, unprecedented styles of any sculptor in America".

YOU ARE CORDIALLY INVITED TO A RECEPTION FOR
THE ARTIST FRIDAY, OCTOBER 5, 1973, 7:30 TO 11:00
BAXTER ART GALLERY / CALTECH / PASADENA

Ruth Asawa is by now nearly a public institution in San Francisco. Her recently installed fountain at the Hyatt House just off Union Square is a major tourist attraction; she is an art commissioner for the city; and she is the driving force behind a new and successful art program in the San Francisco schools. The daughter of truck farmers from Norwalk, California, she lived her early years close to the earth, contained in the discipline of a Zen Buddhist family. War and its hysteria sent her to a relocation camp at the Santa Anita race track, where she had a wonderful piece of luck. She made friends with several interned artists and began to draw seriously. From relocation camp she eventually found her way to that astonishing experiment in higher education, Black Mountain College. There she worked in an atmosphere of artistic discipline and philosophical expansiveness created by Joseph Albers and Buckminster Fuller. The variety of her background finds its way into her art—we see there joy in and oneness with nature, restraint and discipline, close observation and a good hand (Albers insisted on that), openness to ideas and willingness to experiment (Fuller wouldn't settle for less). Her crocheted and tied wire sculptures represent an absolutely original departure, a new use of materials, rooted in both nature and idea. Recently she has been involved in something approaching communal art, working with large numbers of people, often with children, directing them in group artistic endeavors. Her unsigned Hyatt House fountain is the product of many hands—aged from 3 to 90. Working with a homely material, baker's clay, using kitchen tools, she organized the talents of the many as a mother would those of her family. To call her "wife, mother, civic leader, artist, teacher," is not to point out the fragments of her diversity but, rather, to insist upon her unity and integrity.

RUTH ASAWA
Natural Forms
Sculpture, Prints, Drawings

March 17 through April 28, 2007

Opening Reception: Saturday, March 17 - 2 to 5pm

Asawa's unique voice is expressed in her elegant tied-wire sculptures. Airy and sensuously curved globes, baskets and lacy forms employ walls and ceilings, capturing space, light and a vista that encompass the environment. Asawa often creates "forms within forms" - as in Untitled (Hanging Miniature Seven-Lobed Continuous Form within a Form). These complex arrangements of wire threads invite the viewer's exploration. Echoes of these forms can be seen in Asawa's "Desert Flower" lithographs that were created at the Tamarind Lithography Workshop in Los Angeles in the 1960s. She translates the delicate, woven forms of her three-dimensional sculpture onto the sheet.

*Untitled (Hanging
Miniature Seven-Lobed
Continuous Form within a Form)*
Silver colored wire 2000
17 1/2 x 3 3/4 x 3 3/4 inches

In contrast, her cast bronze sculptures are of the earth, relating to foliage and flower forms. Similar dense, flowing forms are apparent in Asawa's sumi ink "Plane Trees" created in the 1950s and 1960s and lithographs created on stone at Tamarind. In Untitled (Free Standing Form Based on Nature) of 1998, the organic form seems to build up to create a blossoming in bronze. The drawings and lithographs relate to Asawa's work in casting bronze, providing another link between her two-dimensional and three-dimensional worlds.

Ruth Asawa has lived a rare and unique life as an artist. Her life, like her art, has been shaped by social and political impositions. As a teenager in the early 1940s, Asawa and her family were sent by Executive Order to an internment camp along with approximately 120,000 fellow Japanese-Americans. Under the tutelage of professional artists who were also held captive in the camps, Asawa began exercising freedom through her art while the government stripped her of her civil liberties.

In 1946, Asawa was recruited to attend Black Mountain College, the progressive art-focused educational community in North Carolina where she spent three years studying with visionaries such as Josef and Anni Albers, Ilya Bolotowsky, Merce Cunningham and Buckminster Fuller. From the teachings of these legendary artists, Asawa absorbed fundamental lessons that instilled a "less is more" approach to art making.

Asawa's work gained prominence on the international stage during the 1950s, appearing several times in important museum exhibitions as well as the 1955 São Paulo Biennial. Most recently, she has been celebrated through major solo retrospective exhibits at the Oakland Museum (2002), the M.H. de Young Memorial Museum (San Francisco, 2006), and the Japanese American National Museum (Los Angeles, 2007).
